

Brookwater's walking trails offer a diverse range of environments, recreational opportunities and a unique history for Brookwater families.

Brookwater is bound by beautiful native bushland and a lush riverbank rainforest. A wander along the walking trails, following the Woogaroo Creek line and above offers you a wealth of spectacular views and an opportunity to spot rare and unique species of plants and wildlife.

Brookwater's beautiful walking trails are well worth the effort. Ending at Brookwater's District Park, you are in the perfect location to have a picnic or to kick a football.

Brookwater's walking trails will take you on a rewarding adventure through an area unexplored by most. As you meander through the bushland and pockets of rainforest close to Brookwater, you will experience a true back-to-nature journey.

The area abounds with wildlife with many native species of birds, mammals, butterflies and reptiles in the residence.

Brookwater is committed to protecting the integrity of the natural community. This has included taking care, during the construction phase, to retain much of the native bushland.

The Woogaroo scrub has long been a popular destination for botanists and naturalists because of the rare and unique species that live here.
